THINKING FROM THE DRIVER'S SEAT

The bus driver – the hero behind the wheel. Much like the tour director who is always thinking many steps ahead, the driver is not only consistently looking ahead, but also in their mirrors and planning for the unexpected. The more details you can provide to your motorcoach professional, the better and more seamless your trip will be.

When booking a charter or tour, these are a few points to consider for your driver:

- Is the bus entrance to the attraction/hotel the same as a standard vehicle?
- Is there ample parking (that preferably will be coned off and reserved) with the appropriate turnaround area and easy access to the storage bays? Are there obstacles such as trees or safety barriers?
- Is there enough time in the itinerary for the driver to get their well-earned and needed rest? Your driver is generally working an hour or two longer than the itinerary.
- Have you looked at the map when providing an address? Is the location in a side street that may not place the bus and driver in a good position? Is the address specific enough? Are there maps that might be helpful?
- Is there a specific route the group would prefer?

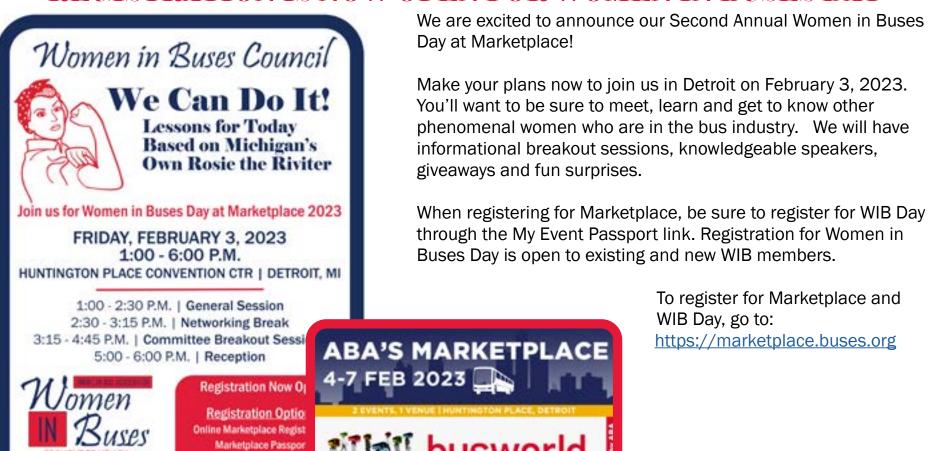

This is just a brief sampling of the many details that drivers would love to know in advance. As sales staff, it can be a challenge to put ourselves in the driver's seat. When's the last time you took a break from the phones and computer screen to ride along on one of your trips? Perhaps this can be a goal for your 2023 sales team --think like a driver.
